Our Father

Pope John Paul recently issued his third encyclical letter, about work in the modern world and the organization of social conditions of work. It had been intended for publication last May, to mark the anniversary (the 90th) of the first great papal letter in modern times on the social teaching of the church. But other events intervened, as you know. I don't think there's been much attention paid to what John Paul wants to say — but one reaction I'd like to share with you today is this short piece from a bishop's pastoral letter to his own diocese, about the problems
